Unlike Moses, Joseph Smith did not have "power in a rod." But if the roles of seer and spokesman are reversed, then we might surmise that his spokesman did. And in fact, that is precisely what the D&C says of Oliver Cowdery. Oliver Cowdery served as Joseph Smith's principal scribe for the Book of Mormon and some early sections of the D&C.

The reason of the insertion is obvious. The title roeh--seer--as time passed on, no longer belonged exclusively to "a man of God." The scribe who put in this expression was desirous of pointing out that when Samuel lived it was the word always used for a prophet of the Lord. In those early days it had not deteriorated in meaning.
